Leslie Cox introduced Bill Faucett, terminal manager and regional safety training manager for Modern Transportation Services, for a program describing safe and unsafe driving practices for motorists and Modern Transportation Services' safety training for their tractor trailer operators. Using statistics from the AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety, (MADD) Mothers Against Drunk Driving, Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations and the Value Driven Driving manual, Bill described how we all engage in bad driving practices and how we can improve our driving practices. Peter Kissinger, AAA Foundation for Traffic Safety CEO is quoted, "All of us should work to build a better traffic safety culture, where more than 40,000 deaths annually is not considered acceptable, where in conjunction with tougher laws, safer cars and better engineering, individuals take responsibility for their own driving instead of blaming the other guy. Known counter-measures could be put into practice today to cut the death toll on America's roads in half. Buckle, up, pass the keys to a sober driver, put down the cell phone or sandwich, slow down to legal speeds, be courteous and stay alert - it's not rocket science, it's common sense. As we pressure regulators, lawmakers, law enforcement officials, highway engineers and auto-makers to do even more to make driving safer - individual motorists - all of us - must also shoulder the responsibility and police ourselves to be safer, smarter drivers. Without such a commitment, highway deaths will continue at epidemic proportions
