Ron Moeller introduced Sparky Wilson, leader of The Carolina Trace Community Emergency Response Team, for a program describing how the Carolina Trace CERT, as a part of the Department of Homeland Security, trains neighbors to help neighbors in a major disaster when professional first responders may not be available. CERTS, sometimes called the responder of last resort, is activated when agencies that would be activated by a 911 call cannot respond. On May 22 the Trace CERT and twelve linked groups such as the Lake Trace Volunteer Boat Rescue, Amateur Radio Emergency Services, Carolina Trace/Volunteer Fire Department, and others will conduct a field exercise that simulates the major disaster with mass casualties that would accompany a hurricane direct hit on Lee County. Sparky stated North Carolina has been hit with 79 hurricanes or tropical storms in the last 50 year. Sparky ended his presentation stating that hurricane season is almost here and it is time to check your home readiness kits, auto readiness kits, and 'grab-n-go' bags, get a weather radio, and get ready.
